The Only Chapter I Plan To Write, So If There's More, Everyone Will Have A Good Chuckle Over This One

Author's Notes:
Saw this prompt on Tumblr and couldn't resist banging out a drabble ;)

Like millions of other couples across the country, Alex and John were standing before an altar in a small chapel, wearing the biggest grins as they held each other's hands.

They exchanged vows of eternal love and the priest declared them partners for life.

The kiss that sealed the wedding was sweet and tender, and somehow more loving than any other in the last 37 years.

Then Alex awoke in tears, his marriage bed cold and painfully empty.

For the wedding was no more than a distant memory.

And his husband was no more than a corpse in the ground.
